

ABSTRACT

A system is disclosed for accessing information about an object, where such information is available at the time of creation of the object but not necessarily available
5 at all times later. In one embodiment, existing object code is modified to add the ability to access the information. The modified code is then executed.